Excerpt

The night was dark and silent, the only sound the gentle lapping of the waves against the shore. Lux stood on the beach, staring out at the black water. She could feel the salt spray on her face and taste it on her lips. It was a familiar taste, the taste of the sea and the taste of tears.

She had come to this beach many times before, always at night. It was a place where she could come to be alone with her thoughts, to escape the demons that haunted her. But tonight was different. Tonight, she had come to make a decision.

She had been living a life of violence and despair since the brutal murder of her family. She had seen so much death and destruction that she had become numb to it. She had become a killer, just like those who had taken her family from her.

But tonight, she was tired of it. She was tired of the killing, the violence, the despair. She wanted to find a way to escape the darkness that had consumed her.

She turned and walked away from the beach, towards the road. She didn't know where she was going, but she knew that she couldn't stay here any longer. She had to find a way to escape the darkness, to find a way to redemption.
